National Conference on
Public Administration and Citizen Centric Governance
Priorities, Policies and Strategies

November 23 & 24, 2023

Background

Public administration in the 21st century is undergoing dramatic change, not only in advanced economies, but also in many parts of the developing world due to demands for transformative change getting louder. Globalization and the pluralization of service provision are the driving forces behind these changes. Policy problems faced by governments are increasingly complex, rather than simple, linear, and national in focus. And yet the prevailing paradigms through which public sector reform are designed and implemented are relatively static and do not fully encompass the significance or implications of these wider changes. Perhaps the single most important challenge facing governments in the 21st century will be how to strengthen the institutional capacity of public, private and civic sectors to meet both the needs of citizens and the requirements of an international economy.

Institutional capacity-building is the process through which individuals and organizations in any country strengthen their abilities to mobilize the resources needed to overcome economic and social problems and to achieve a better standard of living as generally defined in that society. Institutions include both sustainable organizations and widely accepted rules of behaviour in both the public and private sectors. Effective and efficient public administration, including public sector management, promotes and strengthens democracy and good governance. An effectively functioning civil service is essential in order to ensure that democratically elected leaders are able to protect the rights of citizens and mobilize resources through taxes and other sources in order to pay for police, judges, and the provision of services.

Public administration is at an important inflection point with public institutions under increasing pressure, the challenges that confront government and society intensifying, and demands for transformative change getting louder. Public administration in the 21st century is undergoing dramatic change, not only in advanced economies, but also in many parts of the developing world. Globalization and the pluralization of service provision are the driving forces behind these changes. Policy problems faced by governments are increasingly complex, rather than simple, linear, and national in focus. And yet the prevailing paradigms through which public sector reform are designed and implemented are relatively static and do not fully encompass the significance or implications of these wider changes.

Good governance requires building Institutions for a capable public sector to enhance administrative effectiveness. It also implies that goals must be set out as clearly as possible. The government agencies should follow the policies that seem most appropriate to achieve these goals. When goals are clear, and performance is regularly monitored and measured then the goals are more likely to be achieved.

India had fast tracked its administrative reform attempts to further improve governance and achieve the goal of Maximum Governance, minimum government. Karmayogi will be a key enabler in continuously augmenting and enhancing delivery and over the time will be able to support in achieving the goal of $5 Trillion economy. The foundations of this Mission are rooted in the recognition that a citizen-centric civil service empowered with role right attitude, functional expertise and domain knowledge will result in improved ease of living and ease of doing business.

The National Conference

IIPA is organizing a National Conference on Public Administration and Citizen Centric Governance: Priorities, Policies and Strategies, on 23rd and 24th November, 2023. The two-day conference seeks to provide a platform for scholars to deliberate on the challenges; Public Administration faces in 21st century to meet the rising aspirations of the citizen's. The conference invitees will include senior administrators, technocrats, policy makers, academicians, NGO's and representatives from the international agencies.

Distinguished scholars, experts, researchers, and students in the field of public administration, public policy, and development to deliberate, share their experience and latest research findings and development trends in the area of public administration, policy and development studies. Students, experts, and research scholars are welcome to submit their quality research papers which are original and unpublished.

Key Objectives

The objectives of the seminar are to:

- provide a platform for exchange of ideas and good practices in Public Administration;
- examine various measures being taken to promote good governance;
- assess the impact of various reform initiatives undertaken to promote citizen centric governance; and
- evaluate the role of Public Administration for 'India @2047'.

Deliberations

The National Conference will deliberate on one hundred and nineteen papers presented by senior professors, professionals, practitioners and young researchers. These are divided into six thematic sessions and parallel sessions on particular themes namely: Good Governance & People Centric Development, Digital transformation of Public services, Equity, Inclusive and social equity, Local Governance: Managing Effective and Resilient Public services, Public policy & Management and Environment, Climate and sustainable development. The proposed Conference will focus on various parameters of Public Administration and Citizen centric Governance and the need to look at the sectoral development to ensure that public sector organizations are able to meet the expectations of the citizens in a competitive environment. The conference will also provide an opportunity to review the ongoing reforms initiated in various sectors in the country and learn lessons from them. As a result of this appropriate strategies could be formulated for effective good governance in the Country.
